I answer the questions in essay type

Q] How can a person get help paying for HIV treatment?

A:

A: If a person already has health insurance, the insurance will most likely cover the cost of the medications used to treat HIV. Depending on the health care plan, the person may still have co-pays. If a person does not have health insurance, there are options to help provide the medication, these at no cost or at a reduced cost.

The New York State Department of the Health, AIDS Institute offers five programs known as the HIV uninsured care programs to provide access to health care for people with or at risk of, who are uninsured or underinsured.

- * ADAP (AIDS Drug Assistance program) pays for medication used to treat HIV/AIDS.
- * ADAP plus (primary care) pays for medical visits and lab tests at enrolled clinics, hospitals, and private doctor's offices.
- * HIV Home care program pays for home health care.
- * APTC (ADAP plus Insurance Continuation) pays the premium for cost-effective health insurance.
- * PrEP-AP (pre-exposure prophylaxis Assistance program) pays for medical and lab testing associated with the use of pre-exposure prophylaxis medication to prevent HIV.

2) What can we do to reduce stigma against people living with HIV?

A There are many ways people can fight HIV stigma in our lives and in our community whether you are a person living with HIV or HIV negative. In many cases, stigma around HIV exists along side other forms of stigma and discrimination such as discrimination against people who are lesbian, gay, bi sexual (called homophobia); discrimination against people who are transgender (transphobia) and discrimination or stigma directed at people who use drugs. Ageism or negative feelings toward people who are young or old can also play a role in HIV stigma. To effectively address HIV stigma it is important to address homophobia, transphobia, stigma directed to people who use drugs and ageism. Reducing stigma around HIV is about promoting a community where people are accepted for who they are and celebrate our similarities and differences. Here is some idea for how to address stigma:

- * Challenge attitudes, beliefs and behaviors that contribute to HIV stigma. Don't be a silent witness to it when it happens around you.
- * Break the silence around HIV in your community. Acknowledge HIV just as you would any other chronic illness.
- * Get information about HIV testing and know your own HIV status.
- * Treat people living with HIV with compassion and acceptance.

Learn Supportive ways to react when someone tells you they are living with HIV

3) What is the treatment for HIV?

A) HIV is treated by taking a combination of medications. The different medications fight the virus at different stages the health care provider will use a lab test called a genotype test or resistance test to determine the most effective treatment regimen for the patient. The good news is that pharmaceutical companies combine the different antiretroviral medications into one pill. This means that for many patients treating HIV may be as simple as taking one pill once a day.

It is important to seek treatment for HIV as early as possible. Getting early HIV treatment will help keep people living with HIV healthy and prevent HIV from affecting how long they live or how well they feel. The pills have either no side effects or manageable side effects. Taking the medications consistently is the most important key to staying healthy and feeling well. Once a person begins to feel well, that does not mean they should stop taking their medicine. In order for HIV medication to be the most effective it should be taken every day, even if the person feels healthy. When people living with HIV who see their healthcare provider regularly and take their medication every day, there is a very good chance that they will become virally suppressed. Viral suppression, sometimes known as being undetectable, is an important goal of treatment. Viral suppression means the amount of virus in the person's blood is below the level the test can identify.

Q4) What does it mean to have a negative test result?

A) A negative test result generally means you do not have HIV. However, if you had a recent exposure you may be in the "window period". The window period is the period of time between someone potentially being exposed to HIV and when the test is able to detect it. If the first result comes back negative and there is still concern, getting tested again 3 months after the last possible exposure can help you to be sure.

People who have a negative test result but would like to reduce the risk of HIV may want to consider PrEP-exposure take so they prophylaxis (pre) PrEP is a daily pill that people take so they can reduce their worry about acquiring HIV and keep HIV from entering your body.

You may want to consider taking PrEP if you are:

- * A gay or bisexual man who has unprotected sex.
- * A transgender woman who has sex with men in a relationship with a person who is living with HIV.
- * Someone who has condomless sex with multiple partners.
- * A person who has been diagnosed with an STI in the past 6 months.
