AI tools in healthcare: do we really seek for deep learning?

Date: 19.10.2018,

Dr. Santosh KC, Assistant Professor, University of South Dakota, USA

About the workshop

AI and machine learning (ML) algorithms in dealing with challenges related to health issues are the prime area of study that needs to be focused on in the present scenario. As health issues exponentially increase, the manual methods of detecting diseases and their cause are complicated. In this context, making aware of the significance of AI and machine learning to the staff and students felt much more relevant. Hence, the various neighboring college faculty members have organised and invited this workshop.

Total number of students and staff participated: 126

Outcome:

126 participants have explored the various dimensions of AI and its use to resolve the healthcare issues.

Academic Writing Skills for research Journal articles

Date: 10/08/2018

Resource Person: Prof. Mamun Bin Ibne Reaz, UKM, Malaysia

Abstract of the talk: To let other people know about your invention • To share your knowledge • To promote yourselves and to fulfill the organization requirement • Develop a good reputation. Scientific writing does not have to be boring – It is like a story book. Your writing should attract the reader to read it to the end. • Learning to write is learning to edit yourself – Many students do a brain dump, edit it once and call it done, expecting the advisor to clean it up. Know the audience and the journal – One of the first things to think about as you write is who your audience will be – Go through the journal scope to know about the probable readers – For example, a journal is dominated by the medical related articles but they also publish biomedical engineering related articles OR your article is hardware dominated of an application and you are trying to publish it in a journal dominated on the application.

Output

The teachers and students are explored the number of ideas and skills to write the research articles. This has been helped to 62 participants.

Use of bloom's taxonomy in teaching - learning and Evaluation

Dr. Mallikarjun Hangarge, KASCC, Bidar,
11.08.2022

KASCC has realized the importance of Bloom taxonomy and conducted workshop on “The Bloom's taxonomy “

Materials used: <https://www.niu.edu/citl/resources/guides/instructional-guide/blooms-taxonomy.shtml>

In 2001, a former student of Bloom published a new version the taxonomy to better fit educational practices of the 21st century. At that time, the six categories were changed to use verbs instead of nouns because verbs describe actions and thinking is an active process. Both models are portrayed as hierarchical frameworks where each level is subsumed by the higher, more complex level—students who function at one level have also mastered the level(s) below it. Using the revised taxonomy, for example, a student who has reached the highest level, "Creating," has also learned the material at each of the five lower levels. Thus, a student has achieved a high level of thinking skill.

We trained the teachers how to prepare the question papers based on Bloom's Revised Taxonomy 2001. Some of the sample question papers prepared as per the guidelines given by IQAC for Internal Examinations is given below.
